Description

As the semester winds down, it is time to reflect on the work you have done. Between your reading reflections, journal entries, and papers, you have produced around 30 pages of writing this semester. All of you have changed and developed as writers, communicators, and people. These final few days of class are a time for you to think carefully about your experience in this class, to go back and look at what you've written, and to try and make sense of it all.

This final project is a space for you to do this. Project 4 has two parts: a short presentation, and a reflection essay. You will use both these forms as a way to synthesize what you've learned.

Requirements for Presentation

- About 3 minutes (2-4 minutes)
- Reflect on or share something from one of your projects
- Use 1-4 Google Slides, turned in at least 24 hours before your presentation
- No more than 10 words per slide

Generative Questions for Presentation

- What would be useful for your classmates to learn about?
- What can you talk about that will be easy to understand in 3 minutes?
- What mode of presentation will be most comfortable for you and the topic?

Requirements for Reflection

- At least 1,000 words.
- Discusses each of the projects you did this semester
- Discusses your journal
- Discusses your discussion posts and relationship with discussion
- Lists at least 3 things you think you did effectively this semester
- List at least 3 things you still need to work on

Generative Questions for Reflection

- How has your understanding of writing changed over the course of this semester?
- What do you think your strengths and weaknesses are as a writer?
- What skills did you develop in this class? How might you use these skills in the future?
- What were your expectations coming into this class? Looking at your portfolio, how does your development match up with those expectations?
- What about the course do you wish had been done differently?
